Investing With Intention

Portfolios Built to be Greater Than the Sum of Their Parts

At CBIS, our Investment Team recognizes experienced money managers and carefully integrates their unique capabilities into a single fund in order to produce competitive risk-adjusted returns for our investors.

INVESTMENT SKILLS CAN BE IDENTIFIED

Key to our integrated managers approach is our conviction that investment managers can be identified that generate above-market performance over the long term. Our collective experience, and independent research, indicates successful managers possess four distinct characteristics:

- 1. An identifiable core competency. CBIS looks to partner with asset managers with a clear focus — these kinds of firms do not attempt to be all things to all people.
- 2. Demonstrated conviction. The managers we seek are unafraid to be different from the crowd.
- 3. Proven ability to stick with an investment philosophy across all market conditions. We desire managers who stay true to their thesis in the face of adverse market conditions — they tune out the noise of the markets’ short-term dynamics and stick to their investment philosophy.
- 4. An unwavering long-term outlook. Research shows that managers who focus on the long term have a higher probability of success.

IDENTIFIED SKILLS CAN BE INTEGRATED

Beyond these characteristics, the Catholic Responsible Investment approach integrates managers that have unique and complementary return drivers into a single fund that can potentially generate strong returns over the long term. This process provides intentional diversification without sacrificing returns and minimizes the risk that a single manager may bring on their own. For example, CBIS may select a manager with a quality and growth focus and integrate that manager with another manager who runs a more diversified portfolio. CBIS' intentional integration of these managers creates a compelling multi-manager fund with diverse return drivers.

The CBIS Investment Team employs a robust, repeatable process that incorporates both quantitative and qualitative elements to construct diversified portfolios with multiple return drivers, including investment style and top-down/bottom-up approaches. Historically, our manager integrations have low correlation of excess returns – when one manager falls out of favor, the other manager or managers may be in favor. We recognize that managers that perform well over the long term will not always be in the top quartile over shorter periods, and so integrating complementary managers within a portfolio can help mitigate the risk of short-term underperformance by one manager. This is why we expect that the CBIS funds will produce smoother return patterns with less volatility than a single-manager fund seeking the same objective.

Seeking Ideal Multi-Manager Combinations

INTEGRATED SKILLS CAN PRODUCE COMPETITIVE RETURNS

Once chosen, CBIS' sub-advisers are continuously monitored to ensure they are staying true to the investment philosophies and core competencies for which they were selected. Occasional short-term underperformance is expected, but our overarching concern is that they stick to their process.

Beyond monitoring our managers to ensure they are staying true to their investment philosophy and core competency, CBIS at all times demands its managers to implement their strategies while incorporating Catholic screens. Short-term underperformance is not likely a cause for termination of a manager — however, a violation of the firm's investment thesis is.

Over time, we've shown that it's possible to invest in accordance with Catholic values and still earn competitive returns. We believe by successfully identifying managers with the distinct characteristics we seek and integrating their unique skills in a single fund, the probability of CBIS delivering on both of its missions is good.
